30may25, call w sam altman

- . sam said it's hard for him, in good conscience, to ask team to look into our IP further
- . he's not sure if it would end in an acquisition, but thinks it's possibly not worth our time
- . taking that as a disinterest at least in acquisition, i changed the subject to the name issue
- . i mentioned we started building brand already
- . i mentioned virality on social media
- . i ask sam if he would be willing to stop using the name
- . sam said they have a trademark
 - . he thought out loud "will we sue you to stop using the name?"
 - . i was confused, and said "you mean will iyO sue openAI?"
 - . and he said no, would they sue us (firming his thinking that they have name rights)
 - . i said i didn't know they had a TM
 - . sam said he thought lawyers may say they are different enough that it's not an issue
 - . i asked if our TM lawyers could talk to each other, he said sure
 - . i told our story behind the name, the input output, the "y" and what it means
 - . i expressed concern that the homophone nature would cause confusion
 - . i mentioned how i'm already getting blown up by people saying "they stole your name" etc
 - . he said let me talk to our lawyers about this, i get what you're saying
 - . i brought up idea, bring us in, we can build on the r&d side
 - . he said it's interesting, he'll think about that and talk to some people
 - . he said he would get back over the weekend
